Joan lives in a rural area in Tasmania, called Smithton. Yesterday, she remembered she left her cap on the top of the mailbox. She knows no one could have taken it, but when she looked for it the next day, it wasn't there. She would like to know how strong the wind was the day before, and in which direction it was going, in order to find the best place she should start looking for her cap.

Mark lives in Queensland. He manages a small lawn mowing business. He needs to know the weather in the Brisbane area as soon as it comes in order to know if it's worth spending the day and resources outside mowing lawns or manage his company from inside the office.

John manages a minor tennis league for juniors. He is responsible for inputting the week's matches into the website, and also each week's weather conditions at each tennis club that participates in the league. John has a busy schedule and is not always able to do this immediately. Since he has to do this every week, he would like to save these places so he can get quicker and easier access to them the next time he needs to see the weather.

Mary lives in Melbourne. She would like to find out what the weather is in the Sydney Harbor and surrounding areas because she is going on holiday there in a few weeks, but the weather forecast doesn't predict that far into the future. She would like to check the past daily figures (highs, lows, and general weather condition) for each day for the past week in Sydney so she knows what kind of weather to expect when she gets there.
